MR. PROSSER'S LAST.

It may be considered superfluous to analyse an election speech after the election is over, but there were some peculiar circumstances under which the speech of last Saturday was delivered which led us to think it worthy of a more detailed notice than it might otherwise call for. It was the first straight-out Republican speech that has been given in Clarksville for two years, and we are inclined to think it will be some time before we hear another; so we take

We have not much to say one way or another as to to the way in which he handled the local circumstances affecting the present election. His controversy seemed to be they begin quarrelling as to who future epidemics: shall lead the attack, and accuse ardice until the fight is between the two little ones, and the big boy looks on with a laugh. We thought that Col. House, through sickness, was unable to answer the attacks of his two opponents, but he may safely take his own time in getting well, for the two gentlemen answered one another so well that they leave him nothing to do. It is remarkable what a different figure Col. H. presents as depicted by these two speakers. In Prosser's portrait he is a flat money man, devoted to repudiation and the rag baby, while as Akers paints him he is a bloated aristocrat, bondholder and contractionist; he had even the audacity to represent him as opposed to the repeal of the resumption bill. But it is not necessary for us to define Col. House's positions at this day; they are spread upon the records of Congress, and every one can read for

We proceed with Col. Prosser's speech. Premising that the questions of the day were financial, he undertook a vindication of the Republican administration in respect to its management of the public money, and he made a point here which, as we have heard it advanced both in Congress and on the stump by Republican speakers without being answered, we will take into consideration here. Disregarding the stagnation of business us in the face all round, he advanced it as a proof of the sound finance of trust that our readers will not fail to chase a thousand, and two can put the Government that it was now read and carefully consider ex-Gov. ten thousand to flight," Happy able to borrow money at four per Brown's masterly argument for the should be the circuit-rider who has cent, cheaper than was ever known Texas and Pacific Railway.
